

Gold and the FBI

According to a headline from the U.S., gold from the time of the Civil War is said to have been stolen.

The FBI was conducting excavations in Pennsylvania. It was about a gold shipment from 1863. Allegedly, several tons of gold were on their way to the U.S. Mint in Philadelphia. The FBI long insisted that nothing had been found. A legal battle ensued in federal court between the FBI and Dennis Parada, who claims the FBI covered up the find. Parada is co-founder of the treasure hunting organization Finders Keepers. While the FBI admits to searching for the gold, when a site designated by Parada was investigated in 2018, nothing was allegedly found. However, Parada suspects a clandestine excavation by the FBI at night. Residents would have seen excavators and armored trucks at night. Inconsistencies in hundreds of photos and missing travel and expense accounts cast doubt on the FBI's claims, Parada said. The government is nevertheless calling for the case to be closed, but no decision has yet been made.

Whether it is more the sense of justice or treasure hunting that drives Parada, gold has always aroused covetousness, provided for robbery and murder and led to wars. Today, those who want to enjoy gold that preserves value have it easier. Physical gold can be purchased from trustworthy dealers or the investor can bet on the shares of gold companies that can extract the valuable precious metal from the ground. There are, for example, Trillium Gold Mines or Caledonia Mining.
