

Gold is the most trusted asset

Confidence in fiat currencies is fading, and gold could become the number one currency in the global monetary order.

If gold were to rise again as a commitment to cover the money supply, then demand for the precious metal would probably reach new highs. Gold investors would benefit from this. This is good news for gold investors, because the value of the metal would rise sharply if it were increasingly used by central banks in the next monetary era, not just as a reserve asset, but as a commitment to cover the money supply. Recent events have also shown that during crises, such as a war in Europe or a pandemic, gold experiences strong demand. Gold provides security. How stock markets can crash was seen recently when major players in the market such as Apple, Amazon and Microsoft lost significant market value in a very short period of time. When comparing stock markets and gold, gold clearly does better. Stock indices fall and rise with the waves of liquidity created by the banks. But gold is immune to this.

Gold and also silver should be set for a sustained rally. At the same time, the gold price should also be considered in different currencies. As a rule, the gold price is quoted in US dollars. With the sharp rise in the U.S. dollar this year, the price of gold in other currencies, such as the euro, has gone up more than the price of gold in U.S. dollars. In the corona year 2020, the performance of gold in almost all major markets was better than the respective stock indices. So, you should bet on gold, for example with stocks like Canagold Resources or GoldMining.

GoldMining has one of the largest gold resources (more than 26 million ounces of gold) in its projects in Brazil, Peru, Colombia, Canada and the United States.
