

Fries, gold plated

Gold-plated fries can be consumed on Manhattan's Upper East Side, but gold has other important functions.

A portion of the gold fries costs several hundred dollars, they are the most expensive fries in the world. First the fries are blanched in vinegar and sparkling wine, then deep-fried and sprinkled with edible gold, seasoned with truffle salt. To get in on this "treat," you have to put up with a waiting list of eight to ten weeks. According to the chef, it's all about having a little fun after the long Corona. For investors, gold is the symbol of value preservation and a means of combating the loss of purchasing power, rather than a means of culinary entertainment. Consumer price inflation in the U.S. hit a new annual high of 9.1 percent in June. In the previous month, the inflation rate was 8.6 percent. This was mainly due to high energy prices. At present, commodity prices and gasoline prices are tending to fall, and the economy is weakening. As a result, inflationary pressure could slowly ease in the future. The upward trend in yields on U.S. government bonds would then come to an end, and the price of gold could rise more easily as a result.

An average inflation rate of 7.6 percent is expected for the current year in the euro zone. This means that analysts have just raised their expectations again. High time, then, for investors to review the stocks in their portfolios. Gold is seen by virtually everyone as a necessary component, and gold mining stocks are also among them.

To position yourself in this area, it is worth taking a look at Denarius Metals - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=0vavK-uZyxQ> -. Its flagship project is the high-grade Lomero-Poyatos project (gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc) in Spain. It also has the Guia Antigua project and the Zancudo project in Colombia.
