

Those who believe in a rising gold price buy gold shares

Margins in the mining sector have increased, higher gold prices in many cases have driven cash flow to record levels.

Now gold mining companies just need to increase their reserves and attract new investors through mergers and acquisitions. In any case, dividend payments are a nice plus for investors. Whereas the prospects of success and the quality of the projects are certainly more important. Easily accessible gold has certainly been discovered today. Finding new precious metal deposits has thus become more difficult and more expensive. Companies that have growth are likely to be particularly popular with investors.

Of interest to investors could be OceanaGold, an established gold producer. The mines are located in the Philippines, New Zealand and the USA. Currently, OceanaGold - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IYhTVvVWDi4> - could close an important deal with environmentalists. Because then the historic Haile gold mine in the U.S. can be expanded more easily from 4,500 acres to nearly 5,400 acres. And that could generate many dollars in additional revenue. Gold mining stocks are always a useful addition to a portfolio. Gold can protect its investors' wealth.

That's because the crushing global debt burden is likely to weaken major fiat currencies, such as the U.S. dollar. Historically, gold prices have risen as U.S. government debt has risen. A look at the HUI gold mining index shows that gold mining stocks are showing strength even as the price of gold is trending somewhat lower. This is because currently gold mining stocks are still cheap and often still very undervalued given the gold price. So they can outperform the gold price itself.

Perhaps Victoria Gold - https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EfNmop_SVu0 - after all the leading gold producer in the Yukon, would be an option for investors. The company owns the large Dublin Gulch property there with the Olive and Eagle gold projects. Eagle is already producing gold.
