

Silver and gold are in demand, but need to be stored, differently shares

A survey revealed where investors prefer to store their precious gold and silver.

First of all, it should be noted that most precious metal owners prefer bank safe deposit boxes. Around 39 percent rely on bank safe deposit boxes, while 24 percent entrust their valuables to the safe at home. Then there are about 18 percent who hide their gold and silver in their apartment or house. Incidentally, only 58 percent of the latter feel that their belongings are safe. It is also interesting that men dominate with 21 percent compared to women with 13 percent. Men therefore prefer to use hiding places. Women also outnumber men in the use of safe deposit boxes. They seem to have a greater need for security. Unfortunately, women are in the minority when it comes to owning precious metals.

Should it really be a hiding place at home, unusual hiding places still promise the greatest success. However, it is laborious to dig a hiding place in the garden or to wall in the precious metals. The best hiding place can probably be claimed by the physicist Niels Bohr. He dissolved two medals of gold in a mixture of hydrochloric and nitric acid, thus liquefying them. When the war was over, the gold could be extracted again. They could also be minted into medals again.

If all this is too much effort for you, you should consider becoming a shareholder in gold companies and thus be part of the lasting value of precious metals. In the silver space, Discovery Silver and Denarius Silver are appealing.

Discovery Silver - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=yPte8Dlnq4I> - owns silver and silver-zinc-lead projects in Mexico. The main Cordero project recently produced excellent drill results again (up to 300 grams of silver equivalent per ton of rock).

Denarius Silver - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=qF5UyeDX-Rs&t=20s> - is focusing on projects in Spain (Lomero) and in Colombia (Guia, Zancudo). The company is well financed.
