

Gold investments are in now

Recession fears, inflation, sovereign debt, the new cold war - gold remains steadfast.

It is questionable which crises are still to come, but the smart ones take precautions in good time. In crises, the gold price reacts clearly, this can be seen in past years. Gold should not be missing in any portfolio. Unlike many investments, it has retained its value in the last twelve months. At the same time, currencies and stocks have lost value. After deducting inflation, the return on gold seems low, but still significantly better than other investment options. The reason that the price of gold cannot keep up with inflation is that gold is traded in U.S. dollars. But gold has a function that cannot be beaten. It is an insurance against crises and serves as a stability factor.

Inflation could rise even higher. The war and possible new pandemic events that flare up could fuel supply shortages, make raw materials more expensive again. Russia's war of aggression is expected to have a significant impact on commodities, food prices and energy prices well into 2023. In addition, extreme weather conditions will make crops and fertilizers more expensive. Experts therefore believe that inflation will be with us for a long time to come. A 38-year high of around 5.7 percent is forecast for advanced economies. Emerging and developing countries could have to live with an estimated 8.7 percent inflation. What could be more obvious than hedging with gold investments, for example in gold companies?
