

Silver and gold under the Christmas tree

Silver coins have become cheaper again, because the premium has gone down.

Now a transitional arrangement ensures that silver coins can be sold by precious metal dealers again, in some cases with differential taxation, until the end of the year. It came out a good two months ago: the taxation for silver coins will be newly regulated. The so-called premium went with it strongly upward. Many dealers applied the full amount of VAT. Then the Federal Ministry of Finance and now the tax authorities intervened. Dealers do not have to suffer back payment demands. And now a transitional arrangement also allows classic silver coins to be sold at a lower price. Thus, coins that arrived in Germany before November 30 can go over the counter with differential taxation and a lower import tax rate. So, watch out, there could be bargains to be had on silver coins. However, not all coin sellers have lowered prices.

Looking at the classic Krugerrand gold coins, as well as 100-gram bars, the premium seems to be trending upward. Silver and gold coins are in any case a nice gift under the Christmas tree and not only there. And after all, it is not a short-term decision, but gold and silver are best suited for a longer-term investment. If you want leverage on a rising gold price, you can also take the stocks of gold companies into your portfolio. Shares that are not tied to a specific person can also be given as a gift. In doing so, these must be transferred from the custody account of the gift giver to the custody account of the gift recipient, which would be possible. Among the promising gold candidates are, for example, the producers Caledonia Mining and OceanaGold.

Caledonia Mining - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=cSOMcWLvFEw> - has been producing successfully at its Blanket Gold Mine in Zimbabwe for years. Electricity has recently been supplied by the new solar plant.

OceanaGold - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=oze6D75ON4U> - extracts gold, silver and copper from the ground. The projects are located in New Zealand, the USA and the Philippines.
