

Silver - always worth an investment

Copper is a promising industrial metal, gold and silver serve as insurance against inflation.

It is also always of interest when legends of the investment community or commodity experts give their opinion. One of the well-known commodity investors is Jim Rogers, the living legend of Wall Street. Already a few months ago and now again, he has emphasized that he would prefer silver investments to gold investments at the moment. "I wouldn't invest in bonds. There's a bubble in real estate. Equities are very highly valued. Commodities are an alternative and definitely cheaper than other asset classes."

Especially silver would currently have the greater potential than gold, because the gold price is about ten percent below its all-time high, while silver is just about 50 percent cheaper than the record price of almost 50 US dollars per ounce from 2011. Jim Rogers thinks that the prices of silver and gold could still correct a little downwards, then he would invest. He says the fact that commodity prices are rising is because the economy has largely returned to normal in many regions. Now that inflation is on the rise, precious metals are once again attracting more investors. Because they offer protection, as Jim Rogers also sees it. In addition to gold and silver, he also sees great price potential for copper and nickel.

If you want to bet on precious metals, especially silver, like Jim Rogers, and you also see the great danger of a financial crisis coming in the form of loose monetary policy, you should take a look at silver stocks.

One example is Ridgeline Minerals - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dKnSLrRIT8g> . Four projects in Nevada with gold and silver and an area of about 125 square kilometres score with low exploration costs.

Endeavour Silver - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mFuZJgdUMh0> - has been operating successfully in Mexico for many years with two producing silver-gold mines. The pre-feasibility study for the Terronera project assumes high-grade gold-silver underground mining.
