

Commodity prices rise due to the Ukraine war

The beneficiaries are mining stocks. Here, it is important to look for the most promising candidates.

Russia is a major producer of many raw materials. The country ranks fourth in the world for silver and third for nickel. Russia ranks sixth for lead and tenth for zinc. In terms of gold production, Russia is in third place, and in copper it is in fifth place. One of the most important and best-known Russian metal companies is Norilsk, on the way in copper and nickel.

Alongside gold, the economic metal copper is always of particular interest to the investment community. Low copper inventories kept the price of the reddish metal high in February. The war between Russia and Ukraine is fueling concerns about possible supply shortages. To what extent there will be disruptions is still written in the stars. The fact is that sanctions against Russia could have an impact on Russian copper exports from Russia.

High-quality copper deposits are in demand in the mining community, as shown by the numerous takeovers and mergers in the copper sector. After all, copper is one of the key metals of the future that will be needed for the climate change. Just think of electromobility or renewable energies, copper is omnipresent. Without copper, green technologies will not work. Therefore, copper investments should also be in the focus of investors.

Here, Aurania Resources or Torq Resources would offer themselves. Both have gold and copper in their projects.
