Gold shines

Star talers and golden donkeys, gold is omnipresent in stories and myths. Rightly so, because gold is imperishable and preserves values.

Scrooge McDuck, certainly at this money bag divide the spirits, but he is known beyond the children's rooms. The fantasy billionaire invests his wealth in gold. How else? If he were to take only coins in dummy form, the money press would probably have to run day and night. But where would the money come from? The independent central bank of Duckburg would be one possibility. The value printed on the bills would only be worth the good reputation of Duckburg.

Parallels recognized? At the moment, investors around the world are feeling a lot like Scrooge. They could rely on the good reputation of a central bank and the economic strength of the respective country. In other words, they might trust the Fed and the perpetual growth of the U.S. economy, and thus use U.S. dollars to fill their retirement pillows or piggy banks. Or are the European Central Bank and the Euros better suited because Europe's economy is better positioned?

However, the path taken by Scrooge may not be the worst. So, add gold to the portfolio. As a basic component, the gold coins and bars are certainly worth their weight in gold in hard times. If you want a return on top of that, you can invest a portion in shares of gold companies with outstanding projects. While this is a bit more speculative than gold itself, it could add value to the overall portfolio over the long term. Examples of good stocks are Caledonia Mining or Condor Gold.

Caledonia Mining - https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=7uFCyHCv-zs - has been a successful gold producer for years with its Blanket mine in Zimbabwe, and local investors are involved.

Condor Gold - https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=kylBHygyO-Q - owns the promising La India project in Nicaragua. In the first two years, gold production is expected to average around 157,000 ounces of gold per year.
